1. Introduction

This Documentation Report for the EVS Oversampling Data Set for Austria 2018 (doi:10.11587/8A4CWK) is a document accompanying the dataset and the questionnaires.
It includes the survey, which is also available on the official EVS data release via GESIS, as well as an oversample of 304 people with a migration background.

The documentation report is divided into following sections. The first section contains information about the terms of the data use. The study description section contains essential information about the study itself. The study design section contains information about field work, interview mode and weighting. The next section deals with the questionnaires and the language. In particular, the Migration background section contains information about the definition of migration background and the operationalization of the characteristics that were used. A next section describes measures to anonymize the data. A variable list with all variables can be found at the end.

How to cite the data

Users of the data are kindly requested to use the both the data and the accompanying documentation. The citation style is as follows:

4. Design of the study

Overall study design

The target population of the main EVS study are individuals aged 18 years or more (no upper boundary) whose main residency, at the beginning of field work, was in a private household in Austria (excluding institutional households or persons without permanent residence, but including all non-Austrian citizens). The survey took place between January 8 and May 14, 2018. The interviews for the additional sample of persons with Turkish or former Yugoslav (Bosnian, Croatian, Kosovar, Serbian, Macedonian and Montenegrin) migration background were conducted between February and April 2018. From the overall sample of 4040 persons, a total n = 1948 persons were successfully interviewed, which corresponds to a response rate of 48.2%.

Mode of interviewing

The survey was carried out by the opinion and market research institute IFES using face-to-face interviews (CAPI). The survey was managed by Christine Schuster-Himmel from IFES and Sylvia Kritzinger from the University of Vienna

Weights

A post-stratification weight referring to the total population was created for all 1948 respondents. Since citizens with migration backgrounds are overrepresented in comparison to the overall sampling population the sample would not be representative without weights. It is therefore important to use weights in any type of data analysis (especially descriptive statistics).
The weight controls for state, town size, gender, age, occupation, education, and migration background.
Primary Sampling Unit (PSU_ID) was used to calculate the number of required sample points (clusters) per stratum for the targeted number of interviews. The so called "Zählsprengel" (census tracts corresponding to the Austrian administrative units) were selected as the primary unit (PSU). To ensure equal selection probabilities, the allocation of the sample points to the strata was based on the current population data of Statistics Austria, i.e. proportional to the population.

Stratification of the PSUs (STRAT_PSU): One or more sample points were required per stratum (see above). Within the stratum there was a random selection of Zählsprengel. The selection of Zählsprengeln was proportional to the size of the units so as not to distort the drawing probabilities for households.

Recommendation: A post-stratification weighting for inferential statistics is recommended.

In Stata, the correct and complete definition of the survey design for the total sample would therefore be (with Taylor linearized variance estimation): [1]

svyset [pw=Weight_All], strata(STRAT_PSU) psu(PSU_ID)
singleunit(center)

[1] The `singleunit (centered)` option determines how to deal with strata involving only one PSU (see "singleton PSUs") (see, for example, https://www.cdc.gov/nchs/nhis/singleton_psu.htm). In the example, the more conservative (= larger standard error) center method was used for variance estimation.

5. Questionnaire

Availability

The original questionnaire (in English) as well as the German language questionnaire used in Austria with additional questions specific to Austria can be downloaded from the AUSSDA website (doi:10.11587/8A4CWK) or alternatively from GESIS under doi:10.4232/1.13090.

Language

The survey was conducted entirely in German. This also applies to the oversample of persons with a migration background. The questionnaires were not translated. To preserve scientific rigor and accuracy this must be taken into account and explicity referenced, in particular in the case of publications that compare autochthonous populations and persons with a migrant background.

6. Migration background

Definition

Migration background was defined according to the definition of Statistics Austria. "As persons with migration background are defined people whose both parents were born abroad. This group can subsequently be subdivided into first-generation migrants (those born abroad) and second-generation immigrants (immigrant children, who have themselves been born in Austria); if the parents were born in a different foreign country, the country of birth of the mother is used as determinant of the migration background."[2]

There are two variables in the dataset (MigHint & MigHint2), which subdivide the respondents into two different migration definitions (Turkey-BCS-other / West-East-Other).
`MigHint` divides the respondents into "1 Turkey," "2 BCS," "3 others," and "4 no migration background". The following countries are included under "BCS": Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Montenegro, Macedonia, Serbia and Kosovo.
`MigHint2` divides the respondents into "1 West", "2 East", "3 Non-European", and "4 no migration background." West includes Western European countries. Category "East" includes Eastern European countries. "Non-European" includes countries that are geographically outside of Europe (Turkey was also counted here).

The variables follow Statistics Austria's definition on migration background. The country of birth of the interviewee himself takes precedence over the country of birth of the mother (1st generation before 2nd generation). If, for example, the mother comes from an Eastern European country, but the respondent comes from a Western European country, the respondent receives the migration background "West". If both parents have a migration background, the mother's migration background prevails.

7. Data processing

Anonymisation steps

In order to ensure the anonymity of the interviewees, certain variables that were originally queried were either deleted or recoded into coarser categories, and in a few exceptional cases also defined as missing values. A list of anonymization steps can be found here:

Variable	Variablen-name	Gängige Vorsichtsmaßnahmen	Österreichspezifische Vorsichtsmaßnahmen
which religious denomination do you belong to (Q13a) (harmonized)	v52	groups with too few people in them were recoded to „other“	recode 3 "free church..."(1 case), 4 "Judaism" (2cases), 7 "Buddhism" (2cases) into 9 "Other"

Variable format und missing values

Missing values were assigned using the following scheme:

- Not applicable = 7
- Don't know = 8
- No answer = 9

If the scale level of the variable is higher than the usual numbers assigned to the missing values, the missing values are based on the number of digits of the respective scale level. For example, for v243 - "Highest Education Level of the Survey Respondent (Q81)" missing values assigned were 77, 88, 99.

8. Austria specific questions

In addition to the so-called core variables included in EVS survey in each country participating in the study, a number of Austria-specific questions were included in the 2018 questionnaire. Some of these questions were already included in the questionnaire for 1999 and 2008 and some only in one or two EVS study waves.

In the dataset, Austria-specific variables are labelled with the suffix "_at" before the variable names from "v1" to "v39."
