Introduction

With this Code of Ethics, Rifò intends to affirm the principles that guide its daily activities. This statement reflects the founding values that shape our corporate culture, which is oriented toward promoting sustainability, social responsibility, and innovation while respecting tradition.

Purpose of the document

The purpose of the Code of Ethics is to define the shared values, expected standards of behavior, and guiding principles that Rifò is committed to upholding in its relationships with stakeholders, promoting a transparent, fair, and responsible approach.

Mission

Rifò was founded to offer an alternative to the current dominant economic system in the fashion industry, which is based more on quantity than quality, and on extractive rather than regenerative logic. Rifò encourages a return to buying only what is needed by using a pre-order system and a “no sales” policy. Selling products before they are actually made—offering a small discount in exchange for waiting—allows production to meet real demand and helps avoid overproduction. Keeping prices stable all year long is a conscious choice to combat overconsumption driven by discount practices.

Rifò aims to be the first brand in Italy to fully embrace sustainability, offering a clothing line made from regenerated and regenerable fibers, which drastically reduce the use of water, dyes, pesticides, and chemicals. Rifò garments are produced within a 30 km radius of our headquarters. From the regeneration of wool, cashmere, jeans, cotton, and silk to the finished garment, we can guarantee a Made in Italy product that doesn’t travel around the world twice before reaching people.

Our supply chain includes more than 60 local companies, and this proximity allows us to ensure transparency, quality, and ethical relationships throughout the supply chain. Our raw materials consist of 79% recycled fibers, 23% of which come directly from our used-clothing collection service.

Through our work, we aim to share the textile regeneration tradition. We are strongly connected to our roots, and we intend to showcase them around the world with a contemporary and international style. For us, combining tradition and innovation means recovering local heritage to create a new fashion system, where the transition to a circular economy happens in a collaborative way.

For this reason, Rifò is not just a brand, but a broad project of collaborative circular economy that offers people concrete and transparent services to dispose of their used garments and turn them back into a new textile resource through reuse or recycling.

Rifò is a community of people who believe in the need to buy less but better, to get back to emotions, to get attached to what you wear instead of considering fashion as disposable.

Values

The key value that defines our company’s identity and underpin this Code of Ethics is circularity which for us means:

- Quality, because we want our garments to last over time, and to ensure this we oversee every stage of production, relying on artisans and small local businesses;
- Sustainability, because the regenerated fibers at the heart of our collections have a lower environmental impact, just like our local production and our choice to produce only what is needed through the pre-order model;

- Responsibility, because Rifò aims to have a positive impact not only on the environment, but also on society: we promote job inclusion, gender equality, continuous training, and the active participation of people in our project.

Commitment to stakeholders

a. Customers

We believe that our customers are people before they are consumers, and that they are part of a community that shares our core values.

Towards our customers, we commit to:

- Offering high-quality garments and accessories that last over time, thanks to a careful selection of materials and timeless design;
- Being available and responsive to any type of request (questions, doubts, curiosity, inquiries);
- Providing clear and detailed information on the technical characteristics of our products;
- Ensuring the highest possible level of transparency on our production supply chains, from raw materials to finished products.

By informing customers about materials, production processes, and product impacts—using tools such as the Digital Product Passport, the Forever service, and the launch of a resell platform—we guide our customers toward more conscious and circular consumption.

- Educating and raising awareness on sustainability and circular economy topics, to encourage informed and responsible choices;
- Keeping our offer up to date: continuing to be pioneers of sustainable fashion, anticipating regulatory changes and leveraging emerging technologies.

All this is intended to underline the central role played by the customer, to whom we are committed to giving the customer all the necessary attention and offering a personalized customer service based on specific needs.

Furthermore, our business model itself, based on the pre-sales model, is representative of the centrality of the customer, on whom our actual production volumes depend.

The relationship with the customer does not end with the receipt of the product: in line with the principles of the circular economy, we accompany the customer throughout the product's life cycle.

If manufacturing defects are found in the purchased item, the customer is entitled to repair or replacement within two years of purchase, covered by the Love Lasts warranty.

After at least five years from the date of purchase of a Rifò wool or cashmere garment, if the item shows clear signs of wear, the customer can send it back to us free of charge so that it can be regenerated through the take back service.

b. Shareholders

We commit to our shareholders to:

- Manage the financial resources invested as share capital with the goal of increasing their economic and social value over time;
- Ensure the highest possible level of transparency regarding the parties involved in our supply chains and projects, in order to maintain fair and honest relationships.

In other words, Rifò bases its corporate relationships on fairness and professionalism, combined with a serious commitment to both economic returns and social and environmental impact.

The protection of intellectual property and the confidentiality of data and information are also of great importance.

c. Employees, collaborators and interns

We commit to our employees, collaborators, and interns to:

- Safeguard their health and safety by providing regular training and refresher courses;
- Promote the development of professional skills through training and specialization courses tailored to their roles;
- Guarantee equal opportunities for all team members based on merit and knowledge, without discrimination based on gender, age, or ethnicity;
- Support their personal and professional growth through awareness-raising on environmental and social issues;
- Maintain respectful and collaborative relationships;
- Encourage opportunities for dialogue and exchange to foster stronger internal connections;
- Ensure gender equality and eliminate ethnic barriers in hiring processes by focusing solely on merit and competence. Our team is composed by 70% women, 55% of whom hold leadership positions.

d. Suppliers

We commit to our suppliers to:

- Select partners through a transparent evaluation process based on the following criteria:
  - Quality
  - Alignment with company values
  - Willingness to collaborate in an open innovation mindset
- Provide support for maintaining proper working conditions and improving sustainability performance, particularly in terms of energy sourcing;
- Establish cooperative relationships based on shared values and goals.

Rifò is committed to doing business exclusively with partners who are aligned with our values. For this reason, we require mutual commitment, formalized through the signing of a Code of Conduct. This document ensures compliance with the environmental, social, and regulatory principles that guide our company and promotes awareness among all involved parties about the importance of turning commitment into action.

e. Project Partners

We commit to our project partners to:

- Manage the financial resources involved in the project with the aim of increasing its economic and social value over time;
- Ensure the highest possible level of transparency regarding the stakeholders involved in our supply chains and projects;
- Respect both our identity and that of our partners, identifying collaboration opportunities that create synergies useful in pursuing our mission and values;
- Participate in joint projects with full commitment and professionalism, promoting common interests and long-term positive relationships;
- Protect the intellectual property of shared projects fairly and appropriately;
- Safeguard the confidentiality of shared projects, where necessary and as agreed.

The main principle guiding the selection of partners for each of our projects is the alignment of values and the opportunity to amplify our rifolutionary message. We share our initiatives with organizations that positively embrace our ethical principles regarding environmental and social impact—or that can serve as a model for us.

Over the years, we have also successfully participated in numerous tenders, promoted by both private and public institutions. In these contexts, we have demonstrated that our ethical conduct standards also apply in relationships with public administrations.

Ethical principles in conducting business

Rifò has outlined ten ethical principles on which its corporate identity is based. These principles constitute a true manifesto, aimed at guiding and inspiring the activity carried out by the team every day.

Our ethical manifesto:

1. We believe in turning diversity into an opportunity, giving a new life to something that is considered waste.
2. We believe in our territory, which has inherited a vast textile tradition for generations.
3. We believe that it is still possible to produce artisanal made in Italy garments, crafted in the traditional manner.
4. We believe in the magic of emotions and that a garment can last a lifetime when truly cherished.
5. We reject seasonal sales, induced needs, and exaggerated discounts. We want our products to fulfill real needs.*
6. We believe in people, not in consumers.
7. We believe in both the community and individuals, who have the power to change things in their small way.
8. We believe in being honest and transparent, even when that means admitting our limitations.
9. We believe in always accepting challenges, learning from mistakes, and gaining first hand experience.
10. Lastly, we believe that having the opportunity to do what we love, with passion and a smile, is the most beautiful gift we can ask for.

Reciprocal Commitments

In drafting this document, Rifò has made public the principles on which its activities are based, along with the commitments it takes on directly.

We are aware that a circular economy requires the contribution of every stakeholder. For this reason, the company expects continuous commitment from all stakeholders—internal and external—toward the values and principles outlined above. Rifò is open to dialogue and collaboration with its partners and actively promotes tools for awareness and monitoring (e.g., auditing) to support their transition toward a holistic approach to sustainability, in line with a collaborative circular economy model.

Sustainability is built together*!
